Featured Artist: ASHTON THORNHILL

ASHTON THORNHILL is a photographer working on the Llano Estacado of Texas. He was born in Shreveport, Louisiana and lived there for the first ten years of his life. Then he and his twin brother David followed their mother to Washington, DC for her new career. Through all kinds of twists and turns, the twins landed in Dallas, Texas for high school in the 1960s. Ashton went on to study at Texas Tech University. After several years working as a photojournalist, Ashton, his wife Susan and their son Jonathan returned to Lubbock where he joined the faculty at Texas Tech University. He taught photography for the next twenty-nine years. Now retired, his interest in the distinctive environment of the plains of Texas has invigorated his photographic work and challenged his creativity. He has attended workshops with Kate Breakey, Annie Leibovitz, Ansel Adams, Cole Weston, W. Eugene

Smith, and Keith Carter, among others. Grounded as a black and white, silver gelatin, photographer of the 60s and 70s, Ashton reluctantly embraced digital tools more than two decades ago. He now makes his photographs digitally and prints with the best color inks and most stable papers available. If you see him with his camera and tripod on the backroads of West Texas, honk and wave.

OUT OF THIS WORLD: A CELEBRATION OF OUTER SPACE, ASTRONAUTS, AND SPACE TRAVEL

The relationship between the arts and sciences, to some, may resemble that of oil and water. One captures the nature of the universe through objective reason and data, while the other relies on expression of emotion and divergence of perception. At this intersection, however, lays a rich visual history that continues to bring the far reaches of the known universe closer to home.

The earliest movement for collaboration between art and science at NASA came to fruition in the creation of the NASA Art Program in 1962, just four years after the agency's establishment. NASA Administrator James Webb expressed his interest in creating a NASA art program to commemorate both past and future events. At a time when humankind was just beginning to venture into space, Webb recognized the importance of capturing the emotions of exploration, such as excitement and uncertainty, in a way in which history could look back and fully appreciate all that the agency had achieved.

The artwork created through the NASA Art Program shaped the stories of early spaceflight into a popular American mythology, one that inspires a sense of national pride and shared accomplishment. As Dean remarked, "The artists were really missionaries for NASA. I mean, they were carrying the message out like nothing else would."

"Out of This World: A Celebration of Outer Space, Astronauts, and Space Travel" is an exhibit of work inspired by the NASA space program from artists Alan Bean, Norman Rockwell, Robert Rauschenberg, Paul Calle and others.

Teaming Up for Kids

When it comes to children's health, it's important to have doctors and hospitals that you trust not just because it's their job, but because it's their passion. Texas Tech Physicians and Covenant Children's are teaming up for kids to bring expert pediatric care that's built just for them.

Texas Tech Physicians is the medical practice of Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center, which means clinics deliver academic medicine — where patients have access to the latest in care and treatment. At Texas Tech Physicians, the doctors have a heart of service and dedication for kids and are some of the most specialized pediatric doctors in the region.

Partnering with the area's only hospital designed specifically for pediatric health allows the community access to expert in-patient services. Covenant Children's provides medical and surgical care for children—and only children. Patients will be treated by Texas Tech Physicians hospitalists and specialists who have dedicated their careers to learning about the diseases of children and how to truly care for them. With shortages in pediatric specialty care across the country, Covenant Children's gives families access to just about every pediatric specialty they might need, for any type of injury or illness, under one roof.

Texas Tech Physicians and Covenant Children's are proud to partner together to offer the best possible care for children. With over 16 pediatric specialty clinics, the partnership continues to make a difference in families lives today.

"Covenant Children's has seen a direct impact on our patients through our partnership with Texas Tech Physicians," says Dr. Amy Thompson, CEO of Covenant Children's. "The pediatric specialists from Texas Tech Physicians allows Covenant Children's, the region's only freestanding children's hospital, to be dedicated to the needs of children – elevating the quality of pediatric care in our community. Covenant Children's and Texas Tech Physicians honor the needs and wants of kids and deliver care and experience that's just as big as the miracles they are."
